The American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) of North Carolina, a nonpartisan organization, would like to provide voters with information about where candidates stand on important issues relating to the criminal legal system. Our goal is to educate voters about local candidates’ positions on important issues.

All primary candidates for Wake County Commissioner are receiving this questionnaire. Responses will be made publicly available.

CANDIDATE NAME: Audra Killingsworth

Wake County’s jail population has increased disproportionately to the county’s population growth over the past 30 years. At times, as many as 90 percent of people in jail in Wake County are being held before their day in court and without being convicted of any crime. Some of those people will pay hard-earned money to secure their release before trial, but many who cannot afford to pay money bail could be stuck in jail for days or weeks.

Studies show that spending just three days in jail can cause a person to lose their job, home, or custody of their children. And research suggests that pretrial detention increases the likelihood that a person will be convicted and receive a longer sentence. All of these harms disproportionately affect people of color and people who are living in poverty.

There are many ways to reduce the harm caused by jailing people before trial. County Commissioners can play a key role by seeking opportunities to fund pretrial services programs and supporting reforms by the Sheriff’s Department and county courts.
1. One way to prevent the harm of pretrial incarceration and to combat mass incarceration is to avoid booking people into the jail in the first place. Law enforcement officers have the discretion to issue a citation (a ticket with a court date) instead of arresting someone. This policy has been successfully implemented in other counties for certain lower-level charges. Issuing more citations can not only prevent harmful pretrial incarceration, but it can also reduce costly jail overcrowding and save law enforcement time and money.

As a county commissioner, would you support the Wake County Sheriff’s Department’s expanded use of citations instead of arrest warrants for lower-level charges?

Response (Please give a clear “yes” or “no” and any explanation):

Yes. I agree that we have way too many people in jail and dealing with extra punishment inflicted upon them when it was not necessary. The use of citations instead of arrest warrants is something I support.

2. Pretrial services programs are a key part of successful policies to keep people out of jail before their day in court and to help people get to their court dates. These programs range from basic supports such as court date reminders, court-based child care, and transportation vouchers, to programs such as mental health and substance use treatment and no-fee electronic monitoring.

As a county commissioner, would you commit to supporting pretrial services, and seek funding to expand pretrial services in your county?

Response (Please give a clear “yes” or “no” and any explanation):

Yes. People make mistakes. The decisions of the County should be to lessen the impact of those mistakes if possible to help them become and stay productive members of society.

3. Pretrial services programs work hand-in-hand with court-system reforms to prevent the harms that come with requiring payment of secured money bonds in order to be released. Wake County lags behind other metropolitan counties in the state in addressing pretrial reform in a meaningful way.
As a county commissioner, will you encourage and support the pretrial reform efforts of the court-system actors in your county, and seek funding to facilitate those reforms where relevant?

Response (Please give a clear “yes” or “no” and any explanation):

Yes. I believe bonds to be barbaric and excessively punitive for people that don’t have a lot of money. There are better ways to address this.
